Judge Notes / Comments:

Zion has demonstrated that he knows the project well. He is very comfortable with the presentation and personable with the presentation and the content delivery. Unfortunately, instead of speaking to me as a judge, Zion read a script to me. You know your material as can be witnessed by your written script; however, you chose to read your thoughts to me instead of having a one-on-one conversation with me as a person. While I understand that the video element makes it difficult to envision a person where the camera should be, it was evident by your focused gaze that was continually lowering to the right of the camera that your words were written instead of shared from the top of your head.

Failed Ideas slide - Whoa! TOO MUCH TEXT. A slide show is about summarizing main ideas. You can explain your thoughts using your words, but no person in the audience is going to attempt to read that many words on a slide. If you can't summarize an idea in four words or less, then you're doing your presentation wrong.

Your slide show did not always advance when you clicked. Always glance back to your presentation and check to see that the presentation advances. This commonly occurs. On a positive note, in the instance that you needed to search for the appropriate slide for the discussion, you calmly went forward, and then back, in search of the correct slide. Well done. You were not shaken from a situation that was beyond your control. There aren't too many students that could have done a similar job.

Store front layout - sparsely populated. It would have been nice to see more content located within the window, additional signage over the door or in other windows.

Sidewalk display - static display. As a visual designer, it is expected that the content is regularly updated. This means that your work is constantly being refreshed. A sign board that includes merely your logo and an arrow does not provide adequate call to action. Use the sidewalk display for an active promotional campaign. Give the passerby a reason to want to stop in. Give them a call to action.

Overall, you have done a nice job. I hope that you consider continuing with FBLA competition in future years. I look forward to seeing your continued growth through your learning. Well done.
